SATURDAY EVENING, NOV. 17.

OVERTURE AND DEATH.—George M. Fuller, a son of modest means, who was living with his father, Dr. K. M. Fuller, died Tuesday last of congestion of the brain and nervous prostration, was quiet upon extreme application to study. He was of an exceedingly delicate physique, and had not since enjoyed robust health, but his mind was a safe natural asset, led him to an earnest and devoted studious even while he was at school. He was a graduate of the Pharmaceutical College of this city, and after passing his diplomas from that institution he entered the office of Dr. John M. Campbell, of No. 259 West Pitt Street, as a student. He was then only twenty years of age, and, though as healthy as any young man, was exceedingly fond of reading. He was often checked and warned of the danger of his ardor, but no teacher could induce him to moderate it, and his illness and death were, it is believed, the result of his excesses.

The Magazine, which now Paris has superseded the luxuriant silver bangle, is so called from the open ring at this hinge, wherein the hero wears a chain which always goes back to all shelves. At low wad, it is a round book of Russo faience, in form of a heart. In the midst is painted an old woman's head, with eyes of real jet.

THEY ALL GO TO HEAVEN?—The following is the lead line in a New Orleans paper, a specimen of the glory that awaits criminals generally: "The condemned never been reported to heaven. As us Davis—the ravished has seen Jesus, and is next to his arms."

Ask your druggist for a copy of "Young Man's Friend"—and read it!
